THE PROPER DEDICATION OF A BOOK OF THIS KIND SHOULD BE TO NO INDIVIDUAL, BUT TO "THE MEN OF ILLINOIS" ❧ ❧ THEY CAME TO THESE PRAIRIES FROM THE NEW ENGLAND SHORES, FROM THE TIDE WATER & FROM THE MOUNTAINS OF VIRGINIA, FROM THE BLUE GRASS PASTURES OF KENTUCKY & FROM THE LANDS BEYOND THE SEAS. ❧ THEY CAME FIRST A FEW, & THEN A MULTITUDE. THEY WERE STURDY, SELF RELIANT, HONEST AND PROGRESSIVE. ❧ THIS BOOK IS DEDICATED THEREFORE TO "THE MEN OF ILLINOIS" WHO MADE THE STATE ❧

❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧

INTRODUCTORY

IT was the intention of the publisher of "Men of Illinois" to produce a practical book for the use of the business men of the state, but more particularly, perhaps, for the convenience of the press of the whole country. The work does not pretend to be biographical in the broad sense of that word. The desire has been to produce portraits which, in point of excellence, would leave little to be desired and to give just enough of the life of each of the "Men of Illinois" to make the matter of easy and quick reference for newspapermen and for others when such information was sought.

From the inception of the idea of preparing this book earnest support has been given the work by the newspapermen of Chicago and of other cities, who realized the value that the book's completion would be to them. It is possible that another volume may be necessary to bring the work to its full fruition. The publisher trusts that the volume which is given herewith to the public will commend itself and bear testimony at the same time that if a further extension of the work be considered advisable the people may be fairly well assured that it will have qualities both of beauty and of utility.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

IT is believed by the publisher of "Men of Illinois" that even the casual observer of this book will admit that acknowledgments are due to the men and the firms who have made it so attractive to the eye.

It is due to the Miehle Printing Press Company to say that it is thought it would have been impossible to have made the reproduction of the photographs so well-nigh perfect had not the printing of the plates been done upon the presses of this company. There is, perhaps, no mechanical contrivance for the purpose of printing in existence which executes such faultless work as the Miehle Press. Its output is absolutely uniform in point of excellence.

If the reader of this book will but take the pains to look carefully at the copperplate engravings therein he must admit that he has rarely, if ever, seen work coming from a printing press which can so unreservedly and truthfully be called art. The Miehle Printing Press executes the same artistic work of the colortype form that it does in copperplate.

No matter how excellent a press may be, all that it can do with a poor plate is to make a better impression and a better general effect than would be possible with a poor printing press. An acknowledgment is due to the Barnes-Crosby Company that they made it possible to send to the press nothing but the finest copperplates that human ingenuity and the genius of art could produce. The copperplates of the Barnes-Crosby Company are without flaw and without fault.

It is as impossible to make a good impression without a good press as it is impossible to make a good copperplate likeness of a person unless the original photograph were all that it should be. A large part, in fact the great majority, of the engravings used to illustrate "Men of Illinois" were made from photographs taken by Radnor Coover, whose studio is in the Schiller building, Randolph street, Chicago. Mr. Coover is without question in the very front of his profession. For his assistance in making this book pictorially excellent the publisher wishes to thank Mr. Coover heartily, and takes this as the best means of so doing.

The excellent appearance of the letterpress of "Men of Illinois" is due to the work of the Blakely Printing Company. The advance sheets of the work have been pronounced typographically perfect by men competent to judge. It was the aim of the publisher to have nothing but the best work enter into his book. The selection of the Blakely Printing Company was the natural outcome of this desire for perfection.

"Men of Illinois" was bound by A. J. Cox & Co., Chicago. The work speaks for itself, but the publisher wishes to directly thank A. J. Cox & Co. for their thoroughly strong and beautiful work.

In the preparation of a book like "Men of Illinois" the publisher could be charged rightly with something worse than inconsistency if he failed to include in his work a word about the Illinois Central Railroad, whose origin, growth and success were due largely to the same qualities which made great the state.

The advance in material prosperity of the state of Illinois and the growth of the railroad system which bears its name were coincident. Few people, perhaps, at this day appreciate to how large an extent Illinois is indebted to this railroad for its development. Mr. W. K. Ackerman, in a history of the Illinois Central Railroad, in speaking of the license which was given the company by the state legislature to operate a railroad within the limits of Illinois, says: "The charter was a special one and in its bearing upon the future welfare and prosperity of the state was probably the most important ever granted."

There are people living today who can remember the futile attempts that were made by the state itself and by a private corporation to construct a north-and-south railroad in Illinois. When finally the founders of the present Illinois Central received their charter and put their work through the people gave so much credit for the work that statesmen actually quarreled over the matter of credit for having been the first to suggest the undertaking. An acrimonious correspondence passed between Stephen A. Douglas and Sidney Breese because each claimed to have been the first to suggest the railroad subject. Perhaps the credit really belongs, however, to Lieutenant-Governor Alexander M. Jenkins, who spoke of Illinois' railroad possibilities in the state senate as early as 1832.

The State of Illinois made a failure in trying to construct a railroad that was to connect ultimately the lakes with the gulf. The Great Western Railroad Company, so called, became bankrupt in trying to succeed where the state failed. In the year 1851 a little body of strong business men, headed by Jonathan Sturges, met, organized a corporation and from that hour the Illinois Central Railroad has existed.

It is but due to say that the officials of the Illinois Central Railroad have been interested in the progress of the publishing of "Men of Illinois," on account of the nature of the work and its intimate connection with the history of the state of which the story of the railroad forms so great a part. The publisher's acknowledgments are given sincerely to the officials of the Illinois Central Railroad for their courtesies on all occasions and for the information which they so readily supplied.
